Drawing on a wealth of historical and contemporary sources, Zhang argues that Chinese fashion has long been exoticized and fetishized by Westerners. She shows how this exoticization has been used to justify both the oppression of Chinese people and the appropriation of their culture.

At the same time, Zhang also shows how Chinese fashion has been used as a form of resistance and self-expression. She argues that Chinese people have used fashion to challenge stereotypes, to assert their identity, and to reclaim their history.

Chinese Looks is a timely and important book that sheds new light on the complex and ever-changing relationship between fashion, performance, and race.
