Gordon Smith was born in 1865 in the remote Aboriginal community of Wiluna, Western Australia. His father was a Scottish cameleer and his mother was an Aboriginal woman. Gordon grew up learning the skills of cameleering from his father, and he soon became an expert in handling these large and often difficult animals.

In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, camels were an essential mode of transport in the Australian outback. They were used to transport goods and supplies to remote stations and settlements, and they played a vital role in the development of the outback. Gordon Smith worked as a cameleer for many years, and he became known as one of the best in the business.

Gordon Smith was a highly respected man in the Aboriginal community. He was known for his honesty, his hard work, and his courage. He was also a gifted storyteller, and he loved to share his stories of life in the outback with his friends and family.

Gordon Smith died in 1948 at the age of 83. He was a remarkable man who lived a long and adventurous life. His story is a testament to the resilience and strength of the Aboriginal people.
